The invention relates to a porous material for carrying a catalyst for oxidation of NO and a reducing agent (HC) in exhaust gases. The invention according to the independent claims 1 and 23 is characterised in that the oxidation catalyst is enclosed inside the porous structure. The catalyst has the ability to oxidise a reducing agent but this reducing agent is sterically hindered to make contact with the oxidation catalyst.

The closest prior art is to be found in US 3 901 821 which describes a catalyst made of a porous material. The inner circle of the cylindrically shaped catalyst is impregnated with a reduction catalyst meanwhile the outer, annular ring is covered with an oxidising catalyst. (See fig. 1-3; column 3, line 29 - column 5, line 38).

The invention according to claim 1 differs from US 3 901 821 in that the porous material is constructed to inhibit the entrance of unwanted substance (reducing agent) into the pores to make contact with the catalytic material. This technical feature can not be found in US 3 901 821 and is therefore new.

In the catalyst according to the invention the substances of the exhaust gas are directed to make contact with the desired catalyst depending on the molecular properties and the catalyst structure. In the arrangement described in US 3 901 821 the exhaust gas is forced by partition walls and valves to be guided to the right catalyst. The solution of the problem to direct the exhaust gases and their content to the wanted catalyst is completely different and therefore the invention according to claim 1 is regarded to involve an inventive step.

Hence, the invention according to claim 1-38 is novel, is regarded to involve an inventive step and to have industrial applicability.

(54) Title: POROUS MATERIAL, METHOD AND ARRANGEMENT FOR CATALYTIC CONVERSION OF EXHAUST GASES

(57) Abstract

The invention pertains to a porous material for catalytic conversion of exhaust gases, comprising an oxidation catalyst able to catalyse oxidation of nitrogen monoxide into nitrogen dioxide and to catalyse oxidation of a reducing agent. According to the invention, the oxidation of the reducing agent is prevented since the reducing agent is sterically prevented from coming into contact with the oxidation catalyst. Preferably, the porous material also comprises a carrier with a reduction catalyst having the ability to selectively catalyse reduction of nitrogen dioxide into nitrogen, whereby the reducing agent is at least partially consumed. The invention also relates to a method and an arrangement which utilize the porous material, and an advantageous use of the porous material. The invention may be applied within the field of catalytic conversion of exhaust gases, originating from internal combustion engines, particularly Lean Combustion engines and diesel engines.
